The one year typically begins when the money is "payable." When something becomes payable will depend on the type of money we're dealing with. Cost bonds are payable when the case is returned on remittitur. Civil cash bail is payable after the OSC proceeding in which the judge determines who is entitled, etc.

One more question today.

When does the "one year" start running before we can send something to unclaimed property.

One year from writing a check? One year from a judge's order? One year from the date we finally determined we couldn't find someone? One date from the money became eligible for release?
